

Workshop focuses on business health costs

On Tuesday, 74 people attended a workshop about reducing employers' health benefit costs, presented by Summit Occupational Medicine in partnership with the Newnan-Coweta Chamber of Commerce and the Georgia Department of Human Resources - District Four Health Services. Held at Central Educational Center in Newnan, the event featured representatives from Fieldale Farms, a poultry-processing company in north Georgia with an impressive case history. In addition, noted speakers included Dr. Barry Morgan of Summit Occupational Medicine, Peter Townsley, a member of the board of directors for the American Heart Association in Georgia; Dr. Charles Taylor, a physician in north Atlanta; William Robby Burlas, a former helicopter pilot with the U.S. Military who worked in the insurance industry for several years; Dr. Martin Sullivan, a former co-director of the Duke Center for Integrative Medicine; and Dr. James Annesi, who specializes in behavior modification for lifestyle change.

Sunday, Feb 8, 2004